HARRISON'S VISITORS.

New Mexican Republicans Call on the President-Elect.

It is Thought They Urged Home Rule for the Territories.

Gen. Harrison Reported to be in Favor of that Policy.

His Aid Promised to the Centennial Celebration in April.

The Old Man Lee's Visitors.

INDIANAPOLIS, December 22.—This was a busy day with the president-elect. The morning was largely given to his correspondence. There were many callers in the afternoon and evening chiefly town-people. Of the out of town callers of prominence there was Judge T. B. Catron and Col. A. L. Rynerson, of New Mexico, and Samuel W. Allerton, the well known Chicago capitalist. Their visit to General Harrison was largely social, but also political, since they are earnestly advocating "Home-rule" for the territories. It is believed they urged upon the president-elect strict observance of the plank in the republican platform which favors the appointment of residents of the territory to federal offices therein. They claim similar promises embodied in other national platforms have been grossly violated in New Mexico, and they believe that every federal officer, from governor down to stenographer, ought to be supplied from residents of the territories. It is thought their visit to-day was an informal one and merely a precursor to some concerted movement on the part of the people of New Mexico especially republicans looking to their complete emancipation from non-resident rule.

It is not known what view, if any, the president-elect expressed in his talk with the New Mexicans, but a gentleman who claims to know somewhat of General Harrison's views on territory questions says General Harrison for years has been a believer in territorial "Home rule," and that if he follows out his former opinions he will rigorously adhere to the plank advocating home appointments in all the territories. A number of Christmas gifts arrived to-day

NEW YORK, December 22.—Russell Harrison, son of the president-elect, attended a meeting of the committee on the plan and scope of the centennial celebration of Washington's inauguration to-day. He said his father desired him to inform the committee that he would lend all aid in his power to make the celebration successful. At least 2000 are expected to participate in the festivities of the great banquet on the night of April 29. Each lady present at the ball will be presented with a souvenir, as was done at the inaugural ball of one hundred years before.

Dunraven's Feelings Towards A[illegible]

LONDON, December 22.—In the house of lords last night Earl Dunraven, speaking of the Sackville incident, said: Surely it would have been more dignified on our part and more worthy of our position to have taken no notice of the matter, which, as the prime minister early remarked, is no matter affecting the two nations. In the case of some foreign powers, different considerations would again affect us, but our relations toward it are peculiar. We use the word foreign toward them because there is no other suitable expression; but I am loath to use the term toward the great republic. The United States is, diplomatically speaking, a foreign power, but she can never be a foreign land to us. Her citizens are mainly men of the same race and lineage as ourselves, having the same names, speaking the same tongue, worshipping under the same form of religion and living under the same common laws.

A Town Destroyed.

MENOMINEE, Mich., December 22.—Word has reached here of the total destruction by fire of the town of Hermansville, 47 miles north of here, on the Chicago and Northwestern and Short line railroads. No particulars have been received. Hermansville is a lumber settlement of 400 persons, and as the weather is very cold there must be great suffering among the people.

Cold in New York.

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y., December 22.—Cold wave here, 22 below last night.

ALBANY, N. Y., December 22.—Edward Gagher, machinist, was frozen to death this morning five hundred feet from his house.

An Accomplice of the Ottaw[illegible] Gang.

CHICAGO, Dak., December 22.—Curran Bottineau, charged with being an accomplice in the recent smuggling of opium, was brought here last night under arrest. Curran says a man drove up to his house one evening with a load of goods, which he claimed were horses, and which he was transporting to Denver. The stranger requested Curran to take the goods to the depot and prepay the charges to Denver, which he did. Curran was repaid by the stranger when he left. Afterwards Curran was arrested for opium smuggling, 400 pounds of which had been discovered in the boxes claimed by him. Revenue officers assert they have damaging evidence against him.

Fatal Rail[illegible] Wreck.

ST. LOUIS, December 22.—A despatch from Arizona says a construction train on the Arizona and Southeastern railroad, with sixty laborers on board, ran off the track near Coke siding Saturday evening and rolled down an embankment, killing seven or eight and wounding several others. Particulars not received.

Explosion of Glycerine.

BRADFORD, Pa., December 22.—Three glycerine magazines in Bingham Hollow exploded this evening, wrecking a large number of houses in Tarport, a mile away, shattering the foundations of houses in Bradford a distance of three miles. A large building in Tarport, in which were nine persons, collapsed, seriously injuring three children. One, a little girl, cannot survive. The explosion was caused, it is thought, from excessive heat. It is unknown whether any one was killed.

Chicago Anarchists.

CHICAGO, December 22.—The anarchists applied for an injunction to restrain police from suppressing their meetings. The matter was referred to the master in chancery for report.

When the application was again laid before Mr. Winder, counsel for the city asked that hearing be postponed and the request was granted. The matter will come up again Wednesday. Master in Chancery Winder gave notice to the authorities that if in the meantime they interfered with any meeting of the complainants it would be at their peril.

Southwestern Rates.

CHICAGO, December 22.—General managers of southwestern lines decided today to follow the example of northwestern lines and restore passenger rates between Chicago and Missouri points to take effect January 15. The action was taken without the adoption of any [illegible] agreement for the maintenance of rates. The managers will next meet January 3 to consider the question of permanent agreements.

Killed His Father.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Dec. 22.—James Warner, aged 45, and his son John, aged 18, who had been chopping in the woods several days, had a quarrel this morning. The father made a lunge with an axe, and the boy dodged and ran to his home, barring the doors as he entered. The father, going to the front door, commenced to batter it down with an axe, when the son poked a shotgun through an opening and sent a load of buckshot into his father's breast. The injured father died in a few hours.

Contracts Awarded.

WASHINGTON, December 22.—The secretary of war has awarded a contract for furnishing 35,500,000 worth of steel forgings for 8, 10 and 12 inch high power guns to the Bethlehem Iron company of Pennsylvania. An award has also been made of a contract for furnishing cast iron bodies for thirty mortars to the Buffalo company of Providence, R. I., for the steel parts of the mortars to the Midvale Steel company. Bids for assembling and completing the mortars were rejected as exc[illegible]ive.

Lawyer Cutting Not his Employer.

CHICAGO, December 22.—Lawyer Cutting, by advice of Judge Jamieson, to-day gave the grand jury the name of the man who employed him to negotiate for the return of stolen bonds to their owners. The police had arrested Cutting on suspicion that he had a guilty knowledge in the matter. Cutting declared that he never had the bonds and did not know they were stolen. The name of the thief is suppressed.

A Substitute for Jute.

NEW YORK, December 22.—Capitalists connected with the Cotton Seed Oil trust are making arrangements to secure a monopoly of the manufacture of bagging made from pine needles. It is to be used as a covering for cotton bales and it is said will drive out jute. Several millions are ready to be put into it.

NEWS OF STANLEY.

Report of Stanley's Arrival at Arawhimi Confirmed.

A Messenger from the Interior Brings Fresh Intelligence.

Operations of Emin and Stanley During the Past Year.

The German Committee Inclined to Believe Stanley Safe.

News from Africa.

BRUSSELS, December 22.—Kian Tabolo has received a dispatch from St. Thomas containing the report of the arrival of Stanley and Emin Pasha at Arawhimi.

ZANZIBAR, December 22.—One of the special messengers sent in the interior in October in the hope of learning news of Emin and Stanley, from the Germans, has sent a dispatch announcing that he met Arab traders from Wadelai who positively affirmed that Stanley met Emin about January 20. Stanley, the traders said, had 250 men and plenty of stores. He had endured great privation, but he and all his party were well, although extremely exhausted. Delay in reaching Wadelay was due to the difficulty encountered on the route. Emin was in a fairly good position, although some of his Egyptian officers were grumbling and many of his soldiers had deserted. The kings of Uganda and Unyoro were hostile to Emin, who was obliged in November to repel predatory incursions from the east. His general health was good.

[illegible] Emin received a message from the Mahdi pompously intimating his intention to subdue the whole country as far as the great lake, and promising good treatment if Emin submitted. Emin replied that before evacuating he must wait for the Mahdi to prove legitimate his claim to the province. Emin told Stanley that he did not desire to leave Wadelay. The [illegible] was most dangerous on account of pleasant agitation among the tribes and the hostility of Uwanda. Toward the middle of April, hearing that a force of the Mahdi's was coming, Emin ordered his advance posts between Dufile and Lado to retire to Wadelay, and Stanley sent messengers to the kings of Uganda and Unyoro.

About the end of April, when the traders left Wadelay, Stanley was anxious, owing to absence of news from the rear guard on the Arawhimi, and was arranging to send a strong detachment in search of them along the route which he himself had followed. Stanley also again urged Emin to leave Wadelay with him and regain the coast. Stanley sent out several couriers with news for Europe. One was a courier who was sent by the foreign consuls at Zanzibar to apprise Emin of the departure of the relief expedition. This courier had remained at Wadelay and was sent back to the east coast after the arrival of Stanley. Another courier was sent in the direction of the Arawhimi.

Emin Pasha's Relief.

BERLIN, December 22.—The committee of the Emin Relief association give more credence to the reported arrival of Stanley on the Arawhimi than they did Osman Digna's story of Emin Pasha's capture, but they have decided to continue preparations for sending out the Wissmann expedition for Emin's relief until the news is verified. The departure of Lieut. Wissmann will now be retarded until early in February. Although the release of Emin Pasha will be one object of the expedition it will also act in support of anti-slave operations. On his return from the interior it will be proposed in the relcbsing that part of the money voted by the bill shall be used for raising a force of colonial troops, even if it happens that Emin Pasha is safe.

ST. LOUIS, December 22.—Professors Nipser, Engler and Pritchett, of Washington university, and Rev. C. M. Chappin, of St. Louis university, started for Norman, California, to observe the solar eclipse New Year's day. Harvard college observers will be stationed at Willow.

A Hero in Epitome.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—He was a tall, handsome fellow, with an easy manner and a tongue that could let the vocabulary of the language roll trippingly off the tongue if it so chose to do it, and it did so choose to do it on this occasion. It really made little difference which he used, for he was a master in either. The revolution in Hayti, and the capture of an American [illegible] were down there, I will listen to no [illegible] Archelaus Cooper, a prisoner at Santo Domingo, serving out a long term for [illegible] proceeding with Captain Hayden from there.

"Yes, I was in the filibustering expedition and made a narrow escape. I got neither glory nor money."

"How was it?" I asked.

"It is not a long story, and if you care to listen I will tell you about it. It was all up in July, 86, that I was knocking around New York, living by my wits, as I not infrequently do, when I happened to get in with a crowd of fellows who had about as much to do as myself, and who were getting recruits for a secret expedition to Santo Domingo. I didn't know what Santo Domingo was, and I cared not to say that I cared particularly. Well, the result was that thirty of us found our ways on board of a tank one night, as I a lot of arms having been smuggled aboard under a false [illegible] through the Narrows [illegible] Santo Domingo.

"It didn't take long after we had [illegible] the high seas, for we found out, as the chief cut throat in command of the expedition was pleased to call us, to learn that we were bound for Hayti, to be more exact to the harbor of Jacmel. The expedition was this. There had been one of the regular revolutions going on in that island, and there happening to be an opportunity for a filibustering expedition, the patriotic half-[illegible] Virginia bright, followers of [illegible] was not [illegible] Hayden in the crowd, even the leader being a Cuban and the rest being principally Americans, felt that it was legitimate to loot and they be[illegible] to loot with a [illegible] on the shores of the [illegible] and down trodden island.

"We sailed along without any special incident, keeping out of the track of all vessels as much as possible. There being fair weather we did not have to worry much about the work, and outside of a sort of military drill our recruits put up as though they were a jolly crew. We passed our time with cards and dice, but the gambling was done principally on credit, as the crowd was about as bankrupt in a [illegible] way as it was numerous, which was putting their [illegible] at a rather low figure. Every one expected to make a big [illegible] and as it was not yet in their hands, they felt safe in banking on it and all being in the same fix none could complain.

"After about fifteen days [illegible] the Windward passage, east of San Domingo, and then, after striking the Caribbean sea, turned west. Arriving off the south coast of Hayti near Jacmel, early one morning, we ran close in to shore and signalled by running the flag up at half mast. This was answered by a rocket from the shore, so we sent a boat to land, ostensibly for water, the captain of the expedition being one of the party. We had been given to understand that we were a band of patriots going to assist an uprising in Hayti, but, at the same time, it was judged to be beneficial pecuniarily by making a town where the foreign merchants were [illegible] shares in the stocks of to refrain from [illegible] we could not be strictly neutral [illegible] the overthrow of authority.

"In about an hour the boat came back with word from the captain that we were all right, with one [illegible] and [illegible]

"Jacmel was found to be, as the event proved, in the hands of our friends, that is those who opposed President Salomon, the then existing government. Our arrival was hailed with shouts and celebrated by the imbibing of a good deal of very poor liquor. It had been arranged for us to join two [illegible] against Port au Prince that very day, where, according to information received, the [illegible] would rise en masse. There was great excitement in the village with the preparations made for the expedition, and in the excess of my enthusiasm I got so full of liquor that, by the middle of the afternoon, everything was a blank to me. When I became sober enough to realize anything the next morning I found that our company, along with the natives who had taken arms, had gone off to Port au Prince and left me.

"There was nothing for me to do but to await the day of the attack. And, as the story has recorded, the result. It was along in the evening of that day that some of the negro troops who had fled came to Jacmel in the confusion, found their way back to Jacmel, and it was not at the same time that an armed vessel came into the harbor and gobbled our schooner. The armed vessel was the Haytian navy, so I did not venture to [illegible] any [illegible]. During the night an intelligent fellow who had been captured but escaped came to me and gave me the story.

"They had [illegible] the height of Port au Prince [illegible] they made their [illegible] proposed. Instead of being received with open arms by the citizens, they were ambushed by Salomon's troops and a great many of their party killed at the first attack. Of the Americans contingent 12 men were not killed on the field, were captured, and after the party from Jacmel had been routed they were placed in a row and shot on the spot.

"I took the track I felt sort of lonesome. The rest of me captured, my friends were all shot, and I was the same [illegible] thirty [illegible], whose only thought was to avenge the one who had been killed, and to capture and hoot the town where they had met disaster. I confess I had had enough. I did not like what in the world I was going to do when a British man of war appeared in the offing, and seemed disposed to come to anchor. I gave a [illegible] and I had left to run up out to the vessel and was fortunate enough to attract her attention before it stood away. It was a [illegible] and the [illegible] her be[illegible] been closed to [illegible] and did not want to run any risks, which accounts for his [illegible]. I got aboard, giving out a made up story about my being a foreigner who had been disarmed by the rebels, but had escaped [illegible] I was brought back to New York.

"But I make no complaint to the United States government about the killing of our company. Well, no. I hardly thought it would figure well as an international episode, and the fact is, I do not consider it a highly creditable affair, any way. Maybe you'll think it a pity that I did not go along with the party to Port au Prince. Well, probably so. Quien sabe?" HARRY J. SHERMAN.

TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Plans of the Ways and Means Committee Disconcerted.

By Prospects of Early Action on the Senate Substitute.

Las Animas Recount Shows Majority for the Amendment.

Carrying the State for the Measure By Over a Thousand.

Tariff Legislation.

WASHINGTON, December 22.—The Star says: An early vote upon the tariff bill will probably not take place. The plans of the ways and means committee have been disconcerted. They did not expect to hold the bill so close to them and only late in the session if at all, and were calculating upon pushing it in consequence. There was some discussion in the prospect among some of the southern members representing districts that feel injured by the internal revenue laws and there is a growing demand that something be done. Men interesting tobacco districts insist upon repeal of the tobacco tax. Yesterday some members of the ways and means committee are not satisfied with the way the officers in the senate are letting the bill go through. It is probable, therefore, that they will take up the bill when it comes to them and prepare their report upon it with recommendation of non concurrence. They are not quite decided as to their course.

SOUTHERN REPUBLICANS.

The same paper says: It may be [illegible] southern republicans of the house will not present any name to Mr. Harrison for a cabinet appointment. There is one thing they are going to urge, that they think is of vital importance to the party in the south, and that is to "Turn down" the men who hang about Washington as "professional" southern republicans. What we want, says the Star's informant, is to get [illegible] and be represented without going to southern men who can advance the interests and advocate genuine republican principles retaining the respect of their people and remaining in sympathy with them.

The Las Animas Recount.

TRINIDAD, December 22.—Concerning the recount of the vote of Las Animas county, and vindicating the county from any blame, one of the papers says editorially: The recount has been at an expense of probably $4000, and gives a majority of 2666 votes for the amendment and carries the measure in the state by over one thousand majority. The county is not to blame for the error in question. The tally sheet sent out under the authority of the state showed no ruled columns and no printed clause for the vote on the amendment in question. Good and capable men on the election boards made up the tally sheets upon the model furnished by the secretary of state. Just as in other years. Will those who may have criticised Las Animas county unjustly be careful enough to transfer their censure to where it properly belongs.

Nym Crinkle, the famous dramatic writer of the New York World, has the following regarding Joe Grismer and Phoebe Davies' new play, which will be seen here this week. The People's theater was crowded to the lobby, and the new play entitled "The World Against Her" held the vast audience by virtue of its domestic interest, its crowded incidents, its portrayal of woman's love and its strong contrast of virtue and vice. It tells the story of a wife suspected by her husband of inconstancy, owing to the ingenuity of a villain, and abandoned to face the cruelty and scorn of the world. Her struggles to save her child, and her miserable fortunes in London, alone and helpless, are graphically told. Through out it all she remains pure and loyal, and when ultimately her husband is convinced of her innocence, the audience evinced how strongly she had won their sympathies by breaking out in tumultuous congratulations. The play is in five acts, all of which are arranged in the English melodramatic style, to secure change of scene and picturesque contrast, and every act ends with a proper crisis or situation. The points of special interest to the audience were the scene of the meeting of husband and wife when the husband comes to take away the child. It is attempted abduction of the child in the highway by the husband's agents and the rescue by a kindly showman and his wife, the scenes in the London garret and in the counterfeiter were all realistic, graphic and intense. A strong effect is produced by the contrast of a wilful, headlong and unscrupulous girl thrown out the piece against the wife, who has been led astray by a speculating villain, the part of a somewhat familiar type and rascal, who makes a business of tempting a married woman the moment her husband's back is turned, and when he has ruined her offers her his protection with an easy impudence and [illegible] extremely natural. The great scene of the play is, however, in the last act when the husband and the villain come together at last and have a square stand up fight from the shoulder. This encounter created the wildest excitement. "The World Against Her" may be said to have won its way last night. All the indications were that it would be an immensely popular one.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

THE EDITOR OF JUDGE SAYS A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE HOLIDAYS

The Thanksgiving Parades of the Small Boy—The Days Before Christmas—How the Day Is Spent in the Metropolis—The Theatres—New Year's Day.

(Special Corres. of the Gazette.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—The fall and winter holidays are in New York some weeks before the arrival. In June and July the holiday publishers begin to make up their Christmas matter by writing to their favorite contributors suggesting the kind of work they want. The number of subjects required is given over to the artists, who are less busy during a heated term than later on, and when the pictures at their leisure. There are [illegible] enough to make the complete book. When the book is completed there is much regret on the part of the editors and publishers that some of the best matter has been cooled out—that kind always is crowded out—but it is an unfortunate thought later on that the sales of the publication have probably been as great as if it had been in, and it will be capital matter when stored to lead the next holiday issue.

THE FIRST BLOW OUT.

Early in the day, perhaps a fortnight, a flock of several packages, beginning in Washington and coming to this city and all around it and as far beyond as the winds blow, who are willing to make oath that it is anything but a holiday. It introduces to the boys, however, the marauding spirit, which finds ample room and encouragement in the large holiday, which is the Thanksgiving feast is at its greatest and fattest. On the day of that feast the boys of this city are in [illegible] the rest of the day looking through the windows of their papa's horses, if purchance they cannot go to the park with their guardians, but the boys of the street, the little fellows of the tenement houses, the street boys, the bootblacks, to some extent the newsboys, who, however, have little time to themselves on any holiday; the boy tough and the comparatively well-to-do boy, who never does anything but run away from school, if he has to go to school at all. These boys fire [illegible] and matches, firecrackers and bangers, the [illegible] on West Fifty-fourth street to Chambersburg, the hot way, but with faces of profound and [illegible], holy as pickets, so hot they wouldn't be [illegible]; there in his profusely decorated with feathers and with imitation leather [illegible] trousers stripped along the legs; four girls—very fair imitations of them having borrowed a sister's look, and all of them with the bottoms of their dresses as stable and filthy with mud and a dozen small [illegible] who children have stopped if they had tried, they were so overpowered by their temporary [illegible] as a show. Half the boys had tin horns, and they blew them regardless of time and protest against the music of a tenor drum and fife, as these marched before the [illegible] the chief major with a [illegible] cap and a [illegible] that he swung furiously enough to knock out all who came in his way. Units, pity, however, the grand procession [illegible] of a boys of Fifty-[illegible] a little further up, and each procession claimed the right of way, and fell to taunting the other after the manner of men in campaign time. There was a lively but [illegible] fight, and the [illegible] was considerable [illegible] gone; and then with great [illegible] the lines were reformed and the processions marched their two ways with as many hurrahs as if each had wiped the mud with the other, as indeed was the case.

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.

Thanksgiving is hardly gone when the Christmas air begins to circulate, and if the [illegible] frost is not on the window it is looked upon as an unhappy omen. The shop windows are so Christmasy, that the boy and girl linger as long as they pass by, and are amply repaid with the feast given their wistful eyes. As for the grown [illegible] who has nobody to think of him, he is sure, tired of lounging, and the walk up Broadway, if he lives close to that pedestrian [illegible] takes him twice as long as it did a month ago. Finally it will take him five hours to make that brief distance, and then he will get tired of his lounging until just before Christmas, when he will take the walk again and get home to find there has been some alarm and things of astonishing absence. As for the ladies, as well as the boys and girls, everything they do has the Christmas mystery and suggestion in it. The shops are crowded from 10 o'clock till a late hour of the night. And as the days go on the crowd becomes a jam. Always a good natured jam, however, and not dangerous. The elevated roads from Fourteenth up are packed. At Twenty-third street they are [illegible] over, and every car [illegible] and still carries a box. At Thirty-third st. the guards are generally obliged to ring the trains against stops and to person, leaving the jam on the platform [illegible] to the heart as well as cold to the vitals. At Forty-second st. there is a slight relief, but more passengers get on than get off. All the way to Harlem the trains are packed, more people standing up than are sitting down; and when one step from the steaming but good natured Christmas crowd he ejaculates thanks in several languages.

THE DAY.

It is a very quiet day. Most of the music of the character is made by the small boy's horn, which is in full force of every side street and all the avenues. The boy processions are not as large, as numerous or as picturesque as those of Thanksgiving, but they will do. There are many small associations that parade all alone by themselves, with lines like a rail fence and the marching of a band of undisciplined, pigeon toed Indians. The officers of the associations ride in hacks or more open wagons, bearing bouquets and sweet smiles for their lady loves, in behalf of whom the paraders frequently go several blocks out of their way. To give the [illegible] and make the league parade [illegible], the association is frequently followed by the small little black boy with a target, as well as by the purveyor in a wagon laden mostly with beer, the larger and more generally popular liquor, some [illegible] lots of turkey, cold chicken, and always the cheese of foreign extraction. When the procession returns, the boys always in good humor and [illegible] their having [illegible] blowing their horns as if all the [illegible] of the atmosphere had gone in their brief lungs. The churches have been packed and the [illegible] have been as good as anything of that kind furnished in this world. The mattresses have been thoroughly [illegible] and the city round. The beggars have been supplied till they can scarcely carry their baskets. The saloons have been well patronized, but there is little more drunkenness than on other days. If there has been coasting in the big park, all the carriage and horseback riders have been enjoying the amusement. [illegible] have looked at [illegible] walks. Of course, many familiar faces are missing, for many have gone to the old homestead for the old fashioned dinner; but where one of that kind has gone dozens of new faces meet the New Yorker at every [illegible] and on all the streets. If there is anything the lakes of Central park have been skating on, thousands of laughing girls and boys, and they will come and go until 10 o'clock.

THE EVENING

The theatres on Christmas night give their best offerings, and the large audiences they draw give their best and most liberal applause. The Broadway theatres are not as demonstrative and critical as usual—they are too good natured. Those on the east side are largely given to frolicking, with an occasional outbreak of temper, which, however, is promptly checked. At the Grand Opera house, built by Jim Fisk, on the west side, there is an immense audience, largely made up of shop girls and other workers, and they are delighted at everything that took place. They always are, and applaud every movement and [illegible] act as if they thought the show the finest in the world. The music halls are jammed with [illegible] and rapid women. Cigar smoke fills the air, and the various beverages, from [illegible] down, are sold in prodigious quantities. There is a great deal of loud talk. It is very seldom you run across a quarrel or a fight. New York is made up largely of people from the rest of the world, but in its cosmopolitanism, and at all events it is the best natured town in the world. There are few crimes on Christmas night. Everywhere every man's house is open. The difficulties of the political disturbance have been forgotten. Hearts are warm and neighbors in small towns have handshake and [illegible] beer, and here an Irish song, there a German song, [illegible] to you as you pass by; giving directly to the uncle of the little one and the attention [illegible] of feet. And always and everywhere, and all the other places, the small boy blows his tin horn with the evident intention to shatter it before the morning or die in the attempt. As you go through Madison and Union squares the statues of the leaves and branches under the brilliant electric lights look up at you from the hard walks with a [illegible] Christmas look; and you find, looking at the [illegible] that several couples of two sexes have been quietly doing Christmas walking through the long evening, no matter how severe the cold, and whether they have had to do considerable parade arm in arm, to keep them [illegible] from a Christmas [illegible]. Nothing has disturbed them, apparently, with the exception of the Christmas horn at the [illegible] of the Christmas boy.

MORNING

It is pretty nearly over. There is considerable day, but it is informal rather than enjoyed. There are few New Year calls, and people have exerted themselves so much for and during Christmas that they are tired, and anxious to get back to the old business and the old other ways on New Year's day. All but the small boy. He will blow his horn all day, and then lay it [illegible] aside for use on the Fourth of July.

L. M. GREGORY.

Very Bad Medicine.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 17.—Frosted, the Sioux medicine man, has got into trouble from having faith in his supernatural powers. He dreamed one night that the Crows were going to attack the Sioux, and told his dream to the Sioux warriors, advising them to attack the Crows before they reached the Sioux camp. Hearkening to the voice of the prophet the young warriors daubed their faces with war paint, got their guns and tomahawks, mounted their ponies and went out to meet the Crows who was supposed to be advancing.

FROSTED.

They did not meet the Crows, but they met the Eighth cavalry, who had been sent out to capture them and return them to the agency. They were all marched back, and Frosted, whose dream had caused all the excitement, was put in the guard house. He boasted that he could make the wooden rock walk to his place of imprisonment. The agent said that if he could do this he would set him free. Then there was lively betting among the Indians as to whether he could do the miracle or not. Frosted made the attempt, but failed. The agent, however, feeling that some of the bucks might carry the rock to the guard house, thought it prudent to set a guard about it. So it is certain that there is [illegible] going on outside the race track. Frosted is meanwhile in durance awaiting orders from the interior department what to do with him, a question for the secretary to decide. Frosted is now locked up at Sioux Rock agency.

The [illegible]

Marriage is not transformation. John will be as cross when he is happy as glum when distraught with business anxieties, as uncomfortable when his collar chafes his neck—in a word, as human and as fallible a John wedded as single. He is a good son and brother, yet betrothed Mary has heard him speak impatiently to his mother and tartly to his sister. He will, upon what he reckons as sufficient occasions, be both pert and petulant with his wife when once the "new city" has worn off. Were this not true he would be an angel, and angels do not wear tweed business suits and Derby hats, or have disagreeable smoke more than is wholesome for nerves and pocket. Bills are never presented to cherubim at most ingeniously inconvenient times, and seraphim love no natural but thin skinned conceit that will not brook wifely criticism.—Marion Harland.

PARIS SEAPORT

What a Distinguished French Engineer Proposes to Do.

PARIS, December 12, 1888.

The project of making Paris into a seaport is by no means a new one. A ship has always figured in the city arms and the very name of the Parisii recalls the important "station of Seine, or boatmen that controlled on the banks of the Seine long before the Roman occupation. It was at Paris that Cæsar built his vessels, and from Paris that [illegible] started to conquer Britain. During the middle ages and the Saxon, the Norman [illegible] the Paris [illegible] up the river in seven days [illegible] hundred miles to plunder the [illegible] and [illegible] proof that [illegible] could come up the river. Not so the [illegible] in modern times [illegible] come up to Paris for the metropolis [illegible] to furnish, by way of return freight, ships can only take the tide at high water, which at Havre varies between [illegible] feet. Let us take the lowest of these figures as the standard of measurement. With twenty feet of water, [illegible] French [illegible] with every species of [illegible] can cross the bar and [illegible] Bordeaux and New [illegible] ports of the North sea [illegible] greater depths ships, even [illegible]

And we may add that the width [illegible] between the dock and Rouen [illegible] crossing without involving risk of [illegible].

An inspection of the plan in relief readily shows that on the five sharp curves in the course of the river between Paris and Rouen only two should be avoided when cuttings must be made. These cuttings will it is true, shorten by an hour and a half the distance between the two terminal points; but the advantage is elsewhere. In the first place all earthworks are expensive items, while on the other hand freight charges have fallen so low within the last few years that the economy in time realized by a short route is more than counterbalanced by the heavy expenditure in money and interest on that money which the works of canalization entail. A more recent reason for swerving at these points from the bed of the river may be given. In order to follow that bed it would be necessary to open four viaducts and three bridges on the Paris side, two bridges and two viaducts near Rouen, and to supply a lock and weir at Elbeuf. These changes, with a consequent interruption of the traffic, which is enormous, on the Seine and minor lines of the Western railway of France, induced the adoption of the two cuttings between Orsay and Pont-de-l'Arche, near Rouen, and between Bezons and Sartrouville, on approaching Paris. Towering above the former of these cuttings is the village of Tourville, at a height of [illegible] feet; the summit, however, is narrow and the work of digging by no means heavy. A like obstacle is met with in the other cutting, near Sartrouville, but the work of excavation here is of less importance, not exceeding 82 feet.

The projected canal is divided into five reaches, at the sectional points of which four important locks will have to be built, viz: at Sartrouville, and at Poissy, near Paris, at Poses, near Rouen, and at Mericourt, which is about half way down the river. These in course of time may be reduced to three. We will now take up the four locks in turn and see what features of interest each has to offer.

The first reach extends from the Brouilly bridge at Rouen to the village called Posse where the surface of the Seine is not quite 30 feet above the sea. The lock at this place must afford a lift of about 21 feet to enable ship to rise level with the next section. The lift here mentioned and the lock full required to enable a ship with a draft of 20 feet to get beyond the lock, may cause some trouble. It is, however, no more than what captains are accustomed to in some of the channel ports, and the master of a ship meets oftentimes with greater differences of sea level when he docks his vessel at low tide. Besides, such differences are necessary to diminish the number of locks and weirs along the canal. A lock is always an obstruction, and every obstacle of this sort is a loss of time and money to ship owners. There must be as few locks as possible along a canal. A captain may be willing to take a few by the way. It is one of those annoyances one has to put up with. But he would certainly load and discharge at Rouen rather than run the gauntlet of eight small locks along so short a distance as that between the old Norman capital and Paris. Give him but three or four high lifts of 20 or 25 feet, at each of which his ship will be delayed half an hour or so, and he will undertake the journey.

The second reach extends up stream between Mericourt and Poissy, 53 feet above sea level. The lift at Mericourt is about 22 feet. In a former specification this town of Poissy was to be the port terminus. Sea going vessels would thus be able to come up the Seine to a point within 11 miles of Paris as the crow flies. This is no further from the French capital than the new docks on the Thames are distant from the English metropolis. The little town of Poissy is so situated that sea captains will be induced to stop there to load and discharge. Its advantages are undeniable. It is near the Ceinture railway, which runs round Paris. Only two locks intervene between it and the channel. It is within easy distance of Rouen which can be reached in twelve hours. Then again, it will become the nearest port available when as often happens in the rainy season, the plain of Gennevilliers which is intended to be between Poissy and Paris is flooded.

As however the sight of a ship is alone calculated to dispel any doubts Parisians might have as to the existence of a seaport in the vicinity of their be-

Kilrain's Exhibitions.

CHICAGO, December 22.—Judge Altgelt this morning modified the injunction to restrain the police from interfering with Kilrain and Mitchell's sparring exhibitions. Chief of Police Hubbard says he will arrest them for past offenses and will ask the mayor to revoke the license of the Casino, where they sparred.

A Japanese Alliance.

WINNIPEG, December 22.—Porfirio Coello, late secretary of the Spanish legation at Yokohama, here en route to Washington, says when he left Japan it was current report in diplomatic circles that a secret treaty had been concluded between Russia and Japan against England. For the reason that Russia was feared in the event of war with Russia, the Japanese would favor the latter.

B. W. BICKLE,
Manager of the GAZETTE.

We have received a copy of "Salt Lake Illustrated," from S. B. Weller, Chicago. This is a handsome quarto book of seventy pages, containing an illustration on each page, and a very good description of the city.

The Nebraska attorney general seems to be disposed to give the Union Pacific road a severe lambasting. The manager may say if the government thinks that they will pay their debt and, besides, build a number of branches, one of which will be from a point in Kansas to this city. The old management of the Union Pacific was very bad and deserves whatever punishment the people could give them at their proper officers. The road was dishonest in fulfilling its contracts and unjust in its discriminations. But it seems hard to visit the new management with the sins of the old. The new management is most disposed to do whatever is right, and have in mind the building up of the country that their road penetrates, rather than sucking out its life-blood. The prejudice which now exists against the Union Pacific road ought to be a warning to all railroad managements. It does not pay to be tricky, dishonest or unjust. Sooner or later, the railroad must reap what it has sown. The Union Pacific road has labored under great disadvantages for the past five years, because of the bad management and rascality of Gould and Vanderbilt. Railroads find that character tells. While corporations have no souls, they have reputations, and their success depends very much upon what that reputation is.

Politicians seem to be slowly settling down to the idea that Quay's mission to Indianapolis was on behalf of Wanamaker, and that Quay's request that he be appointed to the cabinet will be granted. The attacks on Wanamaker indicate that there is some foundation for the belief that he will be appointed. A great deal is said about John Wanamaker raising money to debauch voters. He denies it, over his own signature, in a letter, and, besides, his whole life is a denial of it. What money he does not use in his business is usually given for benevolent objects. He gives perhaps more, annually, to various good objects than any other man in Philadelphia. The sneer about his being a shop keeper will not be effective among those who have been in his store. The management of his vast and intricate business, and the great wisdom and energy which he has shown in its development, have demanded greater industry, larger views and greater executive ability than is shown by any cabinet minister. His executive ability amounts almost to genius. A great merchant is a man who surpasses all his fellow men in the particular work that he does. They applied to shopkeepers, as well as to people statesmen and soldiers.

The New York legislature at its last session passed a bill providing for the execution of criminals by electricity. A provision in this bill prohibits the publication by newspapers of any of the details. The purpose of the law is a very good one. There are too few daily papers that do not publish accounts of executions which are revolting. In fact some of the leading newspapers of the land make a specialty of publishing criminal news and they are the more much blame is any single influence in this country. If a law could be passed to indirectly compel the publication of criminal news it would be an excellent thing for public morality. A knowledge of crime and criminals is not only of interest, but it is a very direct warning against crime. Anybody who reads the details of the sickening crimes of the day knows that they are not intended to give the details of the proceedings of the courts. The newspapers try to do so, but they are more damage than good. Public opinion must necessarily do a good deal in order towards the papers that publish the most sickening criminal news in order to be supported by the public. The remedy for the evil must be in modifying the public taste.

CO-OPERATIVE BANKS.

[illegible] gratifying [illegible] in the Town of [illegible]

[illegible] 20.—The recent move [illegible] form a sort of "bund" or com[illegible] of all the co-operative [illegible] in this state, the [illegible] paying [illegible] there and the [illegible] giving the earnings of [illegible] showing their [illegible] I am informed in all parts [illegible] that these [illegible] are really an improved [illegible] building associations) have had [illegible] influence in making the [illegible] home owners, also [illegible] and philan[illegible] relations and makes them worth the [illegible] scientist.

JOSIAH QUINCY

[illegible] Lieutenant Gov[illegible] his address will show how these banks combine the maximum of earning power with the minimum of hardship to both investor and borrower. In this institution the investor paid the dollar per month upon his share for eleven years, or 132 months, the series was completed and he received his $200. "He receives," [illegible] the governor, "this $132 and $68 in[illegible]. If the whole $132 had been de[illegible] at the beginning of the eleventh [illegible] the interest would have been nearly [illegible] per cent.—a good investment. But it [illegible] fact invested at $1 a month for [illegible] 132 months. You will find that [illegible] rate is such as is very rarely en[illegible] in any investment."

[illegible] The application is simple. No man [illegible] loan $1 each month, but 200 men by [illegible] can loan $200, and so the in[illegible] goes to making something at [illegible]. Hon. Josiah Quincy introduced [illegible] bill providing for these banks and [illegible] in the legislature of [illegible] the Rock Island bank was incorpor[illegible] Sept. 11 of that year, and its shares [illegible] just come to maturity, which was [illegible] of the banquet and cele[illegible]. But there are now sixty-six [illegible] banks in Massachusetts, of which [illegible] were started in the last twelve [illegible]. The system is briefly as fol[illegible]

[illegible] sixty-five or more years—may as [illegible] themselves and form a bank [illegible] may take any number of shares, [illegible] twenty-five. Each share [illegible] On that the stockholder pays [illegible] month. Any stockholder can [illegible] by giving proper security of [illegible] paying 6 per cent. interest and [illegible] the privilege. Of course [illegible] of this [illegible] varies according to the demand and number of [illegible] The interest paid in monthly [illegible] or at each frequent inter[illegible] may be added to the [illegible] fund, and all goes on draw[illegible] interest. Practically it is just the [illegible] as if it loaned its [illegible] at 6 per cent. compounded [illegible] times a year, and the longer the [illegible] the [illegible] stockholder who is a borrower is [illegible] to himself as well as the [illegible] and in the [illegible] way possible, [illegible] to pay so much of the principal [illegible] his share for his claim [illegible] dividend cancels that debt [illegible] series now in operation will run out [illegible] years, as the system has improved [illegible] by experience, so a man pays [illegible] and receives therefor $200. All the advantages are such as the public [illegible] with as to building associations.

The rent of a house, for [illegible], with the association's money pays [illegible] and something more. These [illegible] have had a very satisfactory effect [illegible] the suburban towns about Boston [illegible] a marked tendency to encourage [illegible] and temperance.

A Pass Written on Silver.

The other day a gentleman bought a couple of cigars in a Dearborn street cigar store and threw out a silver coin in payment. It looked like a quarter, but in a moment he fished it back hurriedly and substituted a real quarter. Then he handed the coin to a friend and said: "An uncle of mine gave me that thirty years ago and told me to keep it. I met him the other day, for the first time since, and he asked me if I still had it. I was glad I did." It was about the size of an ordinary quarter, and on one side is the inscription, "Admit to Wood's Minstrels, Temple of Minstrelsy, 561 and 563 Broadway, New York." This surrounds a cut of the theatre. On the other side is, "Warranted pure silver. Wood's Minstrels [illegible] everything, giving a select and varied entertainment. Intrinsic value 25 cents. 1867." The coin's ring proclaimed it silver, and it is a valuable relic.—Chicago Herald.

Wrong Impressions Corrected!

FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

No one should suppose because of the quantities of Indian Goods to be seen in our store that such things are plentiful or easily obtained. As a matter of fact they can only be picked up here and there in the Indian country by persistent efforts. While on my recent collecting trip I bought everything I could find in this line that I considered desirable without any regard to quantity, and I doubt if all other Curio stores in Colorado and New Mexico together could make as large a showing of the same class of goods. What I secure in our store constitutes about three fourths of the VISIBLE SUPPLY. It may be said in fact that we have a CORNER ON THE MARKET. We do not intend to take advantage of our customers on this account, however, but will give them all a chance to come in and COVER THEIR SHORTAGE before the prices go up.

We are having brief histories of some of our Indian wares printed on slips of paper, and customers who buy such articles for presents will be furnished with as many of the slips as they need for their friends. It will save much writing and the slips may be kept with the articles in the cabinet.

We pack for shipment without extra charge, any fragile articles sold by us, as we know that inexperienced packing of such goods is apt to result in disaster.

We have a large stock of Gold and Silver Filigree Jewelry this year, made by Mexicans in Santa Fe, and our stock of Native Jewelry and Aztec goods is very complete.

We have just had five dozen choice genuine Indian arrow heads mounted as Scarf and Lace Pins, and have had three dozen fine Rocks in Opals, handsomely mounted in Scarf Pins and Finger Rings, all of which will be on sale this morning.

Some one asked me the other day if I bought any Opals while in New Mexico. Why, we have the past year carried a larger stock of Opals than all the dealers in New Mexico together, and I took Opals down there with me to sell to them at wholesale. We act as agents for the largest Opal dealer of Mexico.

The rules of the city schools provide for special promotions at the beginning of the winter term. In order to be promoted at such time it is necessary for the teacher to report to the superintendent the names of such of the pupils as have shown extraordinary ability in their work during the term and who they think are able to overtake the work of the next grade without injury to their health or to their grade. It will be seen that this is a high honor and only rarely won. Below we give the list of those to whom this distinction has fallen

Ready for Business

The Western Building and Supply company is getting its various departments into splendid shape, and is already doing a first-rate business. Mr. Walter Douglass has been secured for the draughting room, and thereby greater strength and more facility are added to the designing department, for Mr Douglass is thoroughly posted in matters of drawings, etc having been on the staff of R. S. Roeschlaub, of Denver, for several years past. The draughting room of the company has recently turned out drawings, etc, for a fine stone residence to be built at Austin Bluff for W. A. Otis, Esq This building will rank with the best houses in town for arrangement and utility, and will probably outrank anything yet yet built in Colorado Springs in design and general architectural handling. This house will be built at once by the company arrangements having already been made for the beginning of the excavation The company is also designing a smaller house for the Austin Bluff Land and Water company which is very unique and original in adaptation and exterior appearance This is the first of a number of houses which the Austin Bluff company will build for renting on its beautifully situated property. Sketches are also being made for a large stone stable for the same parties and location. The plans and specifications for the proposed college club house are approaching completion as well as several other important commissions

But it is in the building or contracting department that the greatest addition has been made and this is undoubtedly the opening of the keystone which holds the arch together and gives it its great strength The company has entered into an agreement with a well tried and successful contractor and builder to take charge of its building department at the beginning of the year

In the supply department arrangements are being made as rapidly as possible so that by the completion of the sales room in the new building (February 1st) it is expected that the company will be able to supply many building items of a kind character which have never been offered in the city before. This will include many articles etc for which the company will be sole agents for Colorado

Beauty of Art

American women have their second home first so [illegible] There is little to be said about [illegible] here they are great [illegible] With dressmakers, and especially non-used for their little feet The French dressmakers say that they shave down the lasts of even the Spanish women to fit the beautiful American foot. A well [illegible] foot looks better in a boot than in a shoe, and it is said to see a foot cramped up in a tight slipper and a pair of shoes a perfect picture of Chinese deformity. To do Americans justice, they do not have to squeeze their feet to make them look small, and the only advice to give them is to go to England for their walking shoes and to learn to walk more.—Paris Guide de la Mode.

Men's Dress Don't Suit Her

The Japanese maiden should sweep in scarlet cloth under a tropic sun, the Japanese woman fall her under the tulip trees, the farmer of Illinois cuts his wheat in a rusty surtout; the Italian peasant perspires in a cheap ulster; the English statesman snores under black chimney pot; they are all as [illegible] and as thoroughly uncomfortable as they can be. Who will teach them the truth that the man alone is [illegible] who is dressed for keeping [illegible] and his occupation, and [illegible] male dress is as ridiculous [illegible] and useless as it at present is, it is cruel to grate of the taste or to [illegible] of the wisdom of civilization.—Ouida

A Real Live Zulu

In San Diego there is a man who is supposed to be a full blooded Zulu and who goes by the name of Stephens because no one can pronounce his Zulu name. He says he was a member of Cetewayo's body guard during the Zulu war, and was in the skirmish in which Prince Napoleon was killed. He shows numerous scars and relics in proof of his assertion and tells a hideous story that may be Zulu or Choctaw for all any one here can tell. San Diego Bee

The Wrong W

There is a legend told in a great Yorkshire town to the effect that, at several couples had been simultaneously married at the parish church, one bride found her bridegroom walking away with another lady on his arm. The curate summoned to her said, remonstrated with the defaulter and brought him to take his proper partner. "Nay," said he, "aw was married to mah an, and I luike her t' best." There is no reason why this should not be sober truth.—The Cornhill Magazine

In Te

Miss Biffers (reading) "There are thirty-two factories in New York and Brooklyn where sewing is done."

Old Lady—Factories? Why, well! That's a new word. In my young days we used to call 'em finishing schools.—Philadelphia Record

Papa Was Growing Thin

"That baby of yours is growing fat," remarked Merritt. "I guess he sleeps well."

"No, he doesn't," replied Cobwiggin with a weary sigh, "nor I either."—New York Evening Sun.

"It's raining in London!" That's the word when a New York dude is seen going up Broadway with his trousers rolled up in sunny weather.—Buffalo News.

Mary Anderson has among her stage effects 500 wigs. This makes her the wigdest woman in America.—Washington Post.
